Program: 1:00 PM – 2:00 PM

Topic: 2025: Mind the Uncertainty

Speaker: Shruti Mishra, US Economist – Bank of America

Session Description: The US economy went into the elections with structural and cyclical tailwinds supporting its growth outlook. There is growing evidence that productivity gains have raised potential growth, and the consumer has been remarkably resilient on the back of a stable labor market. The Republican sweep in the elections is likely to bring sweeping policy changes to trade, fiscal, immigration and deregulatory policies. For now, we expect stable growth, sticky inflation and a Fed that is on hold. However, there is still very little clarity on policy priorities. This session will cover the distribution of risks to our base case on account of policy uncertainty and other factors.
